Introduction

This joint stakeholder report, submitted by Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ), Press Freedom Advocacy Association (PFAA), Community Peacemaker Teams – Iraqi Kurdistan (CPT-IK) and MENA Rights Group, focuses on civic space in Iraq, including the Kurdistan Region of Iraq (K-RI). It addressed issues related to freedom of expression, assembly, and association. Despite Iraq having supported a number of recommendations pertaining to civic space in its last UPR cycle, there has since been an escalating crackdown on civic space in the country. The report identifies patterns and trends, illustrates them through individual cases, and provides recommendations to address the outlined issues and improve civic space in Iraq and the K-RI. It is based on information from local and international civil society actors, documented cases from victims' families, and desk research.

2 Legal framework governing civic space

The rights to freedom of expression, assembly and association are protected by the Iraqi Constitution¹ as well as by the ICCPR, ratified by Iraq in 1971.² Following its last UPR cycle, Iraq supported recommendations to guarantee the full human rights of everyone as per the ICCPR,³ and to guarantee respect for the rights to peaceful assembly and freedom of expression.⁴ It also supported recommendations to promote effective reform measures by the legislature while respecting the constitutionally guaranteed freedom of peaceful demonstration,⁵ and to guarantee the rights to freedom of expression, association and assembly in law and practice.⁶ However, existing laws and the introduction of new legislation threaten the exercise of these rights in the country.

2.1.1 Domestic laws

In Iraq and the K-RI, a number of laws governing freedom of expression, assembly and association should be amended in order to fully comply with the requirements of international human rights law. While some contain important safeguards for civic space, Iraqi and Kurdish authorities often set aside these laws which should in principle protect acts falling under these fundamental freedoms. Instead, they apply other overly broad and vaguely worded laws with harsher penalties to restrict and suppress civic space.

In the K-

prohibits press censorship, guarantees the right to freedom of expression and of publication,⁸ and provides important safeguards for journalists.⁹ However, the Law has been criticised for containing undefined provisions which pose a threat to freedom of expression,¹⁰ and imposes fines of up to 20 million Iraqi Dinars ($15,200 USD) for offenses such as libel and defamation.¹¹

Similarly, the Iraqi Journalist Protection Law¹² has been criticised for containing insufficiently precise and narrow terminology.¹³ Although Iraq supported recommendations to amend it with a view to removing all restrictions on the freedom of the press and ensuring full protection of journalists,¹⁴ this has yet to be done in practice. In addition, while the Law provides some important safeguards for journalists and press freedom,¹⁵ authorities have failed to apply them in practice,¹⁶ as journalists and media professionals in Iraq are routinely targeted on the basis of defamation and other criminal offenses contained in other set of laws, such as the Penal Code.¹⁷

The KRI's Law on the Right to Information¹⁸ guarantees the right to access to information and transparency and aims to create a favourable environment for freedom of expression and broadcasting.¹⁹ While in theory, this law should enable journalists to consult government offices to ask for information in view of guaranteeing the accuracy of their reports, journalists have reported significant challenges in obtaining information from government authorities in practice.²⁰

⁹ For instance, article 7(2) provides that "opinions given, or information disseminated by a journalist may not be used as a justification to cause injury to his person or violate his rights", and article 8 provides that a journalist shall not be investigated for reasons related to the practice of his profession except in accordance with a judicial decision.

on Organising Demonstrations,²¹ which enshrines the right to protest²² while also providing some restrictions,²³ foresees penalties ranging from fines to 1 month of imprisonment.²⁴ In practice, authorities often fail to apply this law and resort to utilising the Penal Code to punish acts related to freedom of assembly.²⁵

The KR-I's Law on Non-Governmental Organisations (NGOs)²⁶ and the Iraqi Law on NGOs²⁷ protect freedom of association. However, the NGO departments in the KR-I²⁸ and Federal Iraq²⁹ established by these laws both reportedly contribute to restricting NGOs' operations and activities in practice.³⁰

Legislation undermining civic space

Iraq's Penal Code,³¹ enshrines numerous vague defamation provisions which restrict civic space. It notably criminalises critiques of existing policies or officials, calling for political change, or expressing a range of other opinions,³² and punishes these offenses with disproportionate penalties going up to 10 years of imprisonment.³³ The Penal Code also punishes the incitement or organisation of unauthorised demonstrations with up to two years' imprisonment.³⁴

²¹ Law No. 11 of 2010 on Organising Demonstrations, accessible here: <https://legislation.krd/law-detail/?id=1663> (accessed 22 May 2024).

²² Article 2 of Law No. 11 of 2010 on Organising Demonstrations provides that demonstrations are a constitutional right and that the right to demonstrate should not be prohibited unlawfully.

²³ Article 3 of Law No. 11 of 2010 on Organising Demonstrations prohibits people from participating in protests for which the organisers have not sought advanced permission from authorities; Article 4 (4) of Law No. 11 of 2010 on Organising Demonstrations foresees that in case of non-response to the request submitted by the committee after the expiration of 48 hours from the date of submission of the request, this will be considered as approval to organise the demonstration.

³² For instance, articles 202, 226, 227 and 229 of the Penal Code criminalise speech that "insults" the "Arab community or the Iraqi people or any section of the population or the national flag or the State emblem," as well as any government body or individual or "a foreign state or any international organization having an office in Iraq or that country's Head of State or its representative in Iraq or its flag or national emblem"; Article 210 and 211 of the Penal Code criminalise the act of "willfully broadcast[ing] false or biased information, statements or rumors or disseminat[ing] propaganda which, by its nature, endangers the public security, spreads panic among the population and disturbs the public peace," or "publish[ing] by any means false information or fake or forged documents or documents falsely attributed to others which, by their nature, endanger the public security or disturb the public peace"; Article 212 criminalises inciting "by any means of publication" the commission of a crime which endangers public security even "if such incitement has no effect"; Article 403 criminalises producing, possessing, obtaining, or translating any written, pictorial, or visual content that "violates the public integrity or decency with intent to exploit or distribute such material"; Articles 430-433 criminalise defamation and define it as "attributing an incident to an individual which could be punishable or bring them into contempt"; Article 434 criminalises insulting someone, defined as "the imputation to another of something dishonourable or disrespectful or the hurting of his feelings even though it does not include an imputation to him of a particular matter".

³³ The Penal Code, or Law No. 111 of 1969, article 202.

³⁴ For instance, article 221 of the Penal Code criminalises inciting or "calling for a gathering in a public place or (...) organising such a gathering or participating in it while being aware of any ban on such gatherings by the public

Iraq's

Publications

Law³⁵ prohibits insulting the Iraqi President, Prime Minister, and the government of Iraq's relationship with other Arab and allied countries,³⁶ and provides for up to seven years of imprisonment for publicly insulting the government, the national assembly or public authorities, or inciting violence and civil disorder.³⁷

Equally concerning, Iraq's 2024 so-called "anti-LGBT law"³⁸ punishes "promoting homosexuality" with seven years of imprisonment and a fine between 10 million Iraqi dinars (US$7,700) and 15 million dinars (US$11,500), thereby posing a serious threat to freedom of expression.³⁹

In the K-RI, the Law governing matters of national security,⁴⁰ which provides for up to lifetime imprisonment for the "intent of infringing the security, stability and sovereignty of the institutions of the Kurdistan Region in Iraq",⁴¹ has been widely used to charge and imprison journalists, peaceful critics and protestors.⁴²

Moreover, the Law to Prevent the Misuse of Telecommunications Equipment⁴³ authorises imprisonment and fines for, among other things, misusing cell phones and email – or more broadly, the internet – to threaten someone, use profanities, spread misinformation, share images counter to public values, or share private information, even if that information is true.⁴⁴

2.1.2 Draft laws

In addition to existing laws, Iraqi and Kurdistan Regional Government (KRG) authorities have reintroduced to parliament draft laws that, if passed, would severely curtail civic space.⁴⁵

In May

the draft Law on Freedom of Expression and Peaceful Assembly⁴⁶ was reintroduced to parliament.⁴⁷ The law had already been reintroduced in March 2020, sparking a call by human rights organisations to amend the draft law in order to bring it in line with the Iraqi Constitution and Iraq's international obligations.⁴⁸ The proposed law would notably allow the authorities to arbitrarily prosecute anyone who makes public comments that violate "public morals" or "public order"⁴⁹ and ban criticism of religious figures,⁵⁰ which would severely limit people's exercise of their right to freedom of expression.⁵¹

Furthermore, Iraqi authorities reintroduced a draft Cybercrime law⁵² before parliament in November 2022 which could punish with life imprisonment anyone found guilty of "inflaming sectarian tensions or strife" or "undermining the country's independence, unity, and safety, or its supreme economic, political, military, or security interests" as well as those posting online content that is deemed to undermine the vaguely defined "country's supreme economic, political, military, or security interests".⁵³ The draft Law had already been introduced and withdrawn several times⁵⁴ following pressure exerted by Iraqi and international human rights organisations.⁵⁵

⁵⁰ The draft Law prohibits the undermining of "religions, religious beliefs, sects" and punish with up to 10 years imprisonment and a fine of up to 10,000,000 Iraqi Dinars ($7,600 USD) those caught "publicly insulting a ritual or a symbol or a person who constitutes an object of sanctification, worship or reverence to a religious sect".

⁵⁴ The draft Cybercrime Law was initially introduced by the Iraqi Council of Representatives introduced in 2011, then withdrawn in 2013, then re-introduced in 2020, before being suspended in February 2021. ⁵⁵ In December 2020, a coalition of ten organisations, including MENA Rights Group, Amnesty International and Committee to Protect Journalists, sent a joint letter to members of the Iraqi Parliament, calling on them to withdraw or sufficiently amend the draft draft Cybercrime law. See: MENA Rights Group, Coalition of NGOs call on the Iraqi parliament to withdraw or sufficiently amend Iraq's Draft Law on Combating Cybercrime, 17 December 2020, <https://menarights.org/en/articles/coalition-ngos-call-iraqi-parliament-withdraw-or-sufficiently-amend-draft-law-combating> (accessed 15 May 2024). In the K-

September 2022,

members of the Kurdistan Regional Parliament introduced the “Bill on the Prohibition of Promoting Homosexuality.”⁵⁶ The bill would suspend, for up to one month, the licenses of media companies and civil society organisations that “promote homosexuality”, and anyone who advocates for LGBTQ+ rights or “promotes homosexuality” would face up to one year in prison and a fine of up to five million dinars (US$3,430).⁵⁷

In January 2023, Iraqi Kurdish authorities reportedly attempted to pass a general amnesty bill⁵⁸ that excluded imprisoned journalists and political prisoners.⁵⁹

Recommendations:

- Amend laws governing civic space, such as press laws, laws on demonstrations, and laws on NGOs, so as to comply with international human rights standards;
- Amend the Penal Code and laws on national security, LGBTQ+, publications, and preventing internet misuse, so as to comply with international human rights standards, and cease applying them to peaceful acts of free speech, association and assembly;
- Revoke draft laws on freedom of expression and peaceful assembly, on cybercrime, on prohibiting the promotion of homosexuality and excluding imprisoned journalists and political prisoners from a general amnesty.

3 The pattern of repression

3.1 Crackdown on freedom of assembly

Iraq supported 19 recommendations pertaining to freedom of assembly, including 13 regarding the human rights violations and the excessive use of force against protesters, notably in the context of the October 2019 demonstrations.⁶⁰ However, to date, perpetrators of these violations largely remain unpunished in Iraq, and Kurdish authorities have actively cracked down on freedom of assembly since the last UPR cycle.

Association were among 12 human rights organisations who urged the Iraqi CMC to withdraw a leaked draft Regulation that threatens digital freedom of expression in Iraq. See: MENA Rights Group, Open letter to the Iraqi Communications and Media Commission: Drop the draft regulation of digital content and protect freedom of expression online, 15 March 2023, <https://menarights.org/en/articles/open-letter-iraqi-communications-and-media-commission-drop-draft-regulation-digital> (accessed 16 May 2024).

⁵⁹ Article 6 of the proposed law excluded from its scope offenses contained in the Law No. 21 of 2003 on national security and Law No. 3 of 2006 on Combating Terrorism, which are frequently used to charge, prosecute and detain journalists and activists in the K-RI. 3.1.1 I

In October 2019, protests focused on government corruption, economic conditions, and abuse by security forces, also referred to as the Tishreen protests, broke out across central and southern Iraq.⁶¹ In reaction, Iraqi security forces, including riot police, counterterrorism forces, and factions of the Popular Mobilisation Units (PMU)⁶² carried out extremely violent attacks against peaceful demonstrators, which included the use of excessive and unnecessary lethal force,⁶³ including by military-grade tear gas canisters causing horrific lethal injuries,⁶⁴ live ammunition,⁶⁵ deadly sniper attacks,⁶⁶ and a string of assassination attempts.⁶⁷ At least 600 people were killed, and tens of thousands were injured.⁶⁸

Additionally, Iraqi authorities closed down media outlets covering the protests,⁶⁹ and executed a crackdown on activists, journalists, human rights defenders (HRDs) and anyone involved, directly or indirectly, with the protest movement, notably through targeted abductions and enforced disappearances of individuals who remain missing to date.⁷⁰ Among them, MENA rights group notably documented a dozen cases of enforced disappearances, including 8

In terms of accountability for the excessive use of force during the protests, the authorities established a fact-finding committee as well as judicial investigative committees in each demonstration-affected governorate.⁷⁶ However, UN experts have held that these steps have been undermined by the lack of public reports on the actions taken by the fact-finding committee, the limited progress made on investigations, and the fact that only a handful of prosecutions have been undertaken.⁷⁷

3.1.2 K

Kurdistan region of Iraq (KR-I)

In August 2020, widespread protests erupted in the KR-I, mainly in Sulaimaniyah, Duhok and Erbil, demanding an end to corruption, better public services, and the payment of overdue salaries of government employees.⁷⁸ In response, the Internet was blocked,⁷⁹ media outlets covering the protests were raided and closed down,⁸⁰ and a significant number of security forces were deployed to suppress demonstrations, resulting in many protesters being injured.⁸¹

KRG authorities also launched a mass campaign of arrests against activists, protesters and journalists covering the protests under the pretext of preserving “national security”.⁸² Security forces reportedly arrested over 100 individuals in Duhok governorate alone.⁸³ Amnesty International notably documented the cases of 14 individuals⁸⁴ from Badinan who were arbitrarily arrested, detained, and in some cases disappeared, by *Asayish*⁸⁵ and *Parastin*⁸⁶ forces, between August and October 2020.⁸⁷

Recommendations:

- Guarantee full respect for the right to peaceful assembly, in law and in practice;
- Conduct prompt, independent and effective investigations into the excessive use of force against protesters;

⁸⁷ All 14 individuals were held incommunicado for periods ranging between a few days to five months; six were subjected to enforced disappearance for periods of time ranging between 10 days to over three months. Three were released but went into hiding for fear of renewed reprisals and one went into hiding after receiving threats; five remained in detention without charge or known charges; and five individuals were sentenced to six years in prison following an unfair trial. Amnesty International further documented four instances of harassment or intimidation of family members of these individuals in detention or hiding, including by arrest and verbal threats. 3.2 Targeting of journalists and restrictions on freedom of the press

Iraq supported 9 recommendations pertaining to freedom of the press and of the media, and the protection of journalists and media professionals, including 2 recommendations specifically referring to the killings of journalists.⁸⁸ However, practice has shown that Iraq has failed to implement these recommendations.

Press Freedom Advocacy Association (PFAA) has documented 373 cases of violations perpetrated against journalists and media professionals and outlets in Iraq and the K-RI in 2019,⁸⁹ 305 cases in 2020,⁹⁰ 233 cases in 2021,⁹¹ 388 cases in 2022,⁹² and 256 cases in 2023.⁹³

⁸⁸ Supported: 147.197 (Canada); 147.195 (Austria); 147.193 (Argentina); 147.188 (France); 147.186 (Netherlands); 147.185 (Slovakia); 147.183 (Maldives); 147.177 (Greece); 147.71 (Denmark).

Iraq is ranked 6th in CPJ's Global Impunity Index 2023, with 17 unsolved murders of journalists, and is one of the few countries to have been on the Index every year since its inception in 2007.⁹⁴ According to Reporters Without Borders (RSF)'s 2024 annual World Press Freedom Index, Iraq is ranked 169th out of 180 countries.⁹⁵

In Iraq, the Communications and Media Commission (CMC) and its guidelines pose a serious threat to freedom of expression and freedom of the press.⁹⁶ The CMC is the regulatory body for broadcasting and telecommunications established by the Iraqi Constitution,⁹⁷ and is directly linked to the parliament.⁹⁸ The CMC's guidelines, issued in June 2014 to regulate media "during the war on terror"⁹⁹ before being updated and renamed the "Media Broadcasting Rules" in May 2019, restrict freedom of the press to the point of requiring pro-government coverage.¹⁰⁰ The CMC's guidelines and operations fail to abide by international human rights standards,¹⁰¹ and Human Rights Watch has stated that it was unable to determine its legal basis,¹⁰² thereby rendering the CMC's decisions arbitrary and unlawful.¹⁰³

the CMC has been criticised for being highly politicised and often retaliating against critical media outlets.¹⁰⁴ In April 2020, the CMC suspended Reuters' license for three months in addition to a fine of 25 million Iraqi Dinars (US$21,000) for publishing an article alleging that the number of confirmed Covid-19 cases in the country was much higher than official statistics were stating.¹⁰⁵ In August 2023, the CMC issued a directive ordering all media outlets to replace the term "homosexuality" with "sexual deviance" in their published and broadcast language and banning use of the term "gender."¹⁰⁶

In May 2021, PFAA conducted a survey completed by a number of journalists and media professionals,¹⁰⁷ among which 95 journalists and media professionals reported that the CMC directly violated their rights or restricted or interfered their work, notably by banning them from publishing or broadcasting any opinions deemed critical of political parties and threatening them of denying their broadcasting license.¹⁰⁸

Iraqi authorities have also suppressed press freedom by preventing media outlets from covering protests.¹⁰⁹ In the beginning of the demonstrations which began in October 2019, armed and masked gunmen, some in military uniform, raided offices of the news outlets Al

A number of journalists covering protests in Iraq have been killed or faced assassination attempts.¹¹⁴ Among them, Ahmed Muhana al-Lami, who had been covering the October 2019 protests, was shot and killed in December 2019,¹¹⁵ reporter Ahmed Abdul Samad and camera operator Safaa Ghali, who were covering protests in Basra with Dijlah TV, were shot and killed in January 2020,¹¹⁶ and Nizar Thanoun, chief executive officer of Al-Rasheed TV, was shot and killed in February 2020.¹¹⁷

Iraqi authorities have also targeted journalists through enforced disappearances. MENA rights group notably documented the enforced disappearances of 2 freelance photographers and 1 journalist covering the October 2019 protests.¹¹⁸ As of May 2024, CPJ reported that the fate and whereabouts of at least 9 journalists remain unknown.¹¹⁹

Among them, Bassem al-Zaak, a freelance journalist and civil society activist, was abducted in October 2021, presumably by members of the PMU, while he was livestreaming a sit-in in

As for the method of judicial harassment, freelance journalist Suadad al-Salhy received an arrest warrant over allegations of "defamation"¹²² in October 2020.¹²³ She had written for several global news organisations, including Al-Jazeera¹²⁴ and the New York Times,¹²⁵ covering politics and security matters in Iraq,¹²⁶ and had written about anti-government protests in Middle East Eye a month prior to the issuance of the warrant.¹²⁷ Al-Salhy regularly received threats from multiple sides and was subjected to attempts of kidnapping and assassination since 2003.¹²⁸ Similarly, in June 2022, an arrest warrant was issued against Sarmad al-Taei, a freelance writer, for criticising Iraq's judicial system and the leadership of Iran in an interview broadcasted on TV.¹²⁹

According to data gathered by PFAA in 2021, 184 journalists and media professionals reported that they and their institutions are subjected to political pressure to alter their media and broadcasting content, 100 stated that their work or services were terminated without any prior notice, 99 reported coverage and duty obstruction, 84 reported having been subjected to arrests and detention for their work, 69 stated their place of work had been threatened with

It is noteworthy that there used to be a specialised Publications and Media Court in Iraq, which seemingly offered more safeguards for journalists than the current landscape. Established in July 2010, this court was competent in media, publishing, and press issues¹³¹ but was abolished in April 2017¹³² due to a lack of a legal basis.¹³³ For this reason, Iraqi authorities have held that the court could not be reinstated, despite similar specialised courts remaining in place.¹³⁴

In 2022, judges with “specialised” competence over media and publishing matters were appointed within existing courts, which has led to a misleading narrative that the specialised court had been reinstated.¹³⁵ However, human rights organisations, including PFAA,¹³⁶ argue that the specialised court offered greater protection for journalists, imposing at most fines rather than the lengthy prison sentences now possible under ordinary courts,¹³⁷ and that this shift has resulted in increased repression of press freedom.¹³⁸

In 2024, CPJ and PFAA continue to monitor the cases of at least seven journalists that cannot be made public due to journalists’ fear of retaliation by authorities, notably through lawsuits, arrests, detentions, bans, and threats to their lives.

In February 2021, 5 individuals among the so-called “Badinan prisoners”,¹⁴⁴ including 3 journalists, Sherwan Sherwani, Eyaz Karam and Guhdar Zebari, and 2 activists, were sentenced to six years in prison.¹⁴⁵ Based on proceedings marred by serious violations of fair trial standards as well as high-level political interference,¹⁴⁶ they were all found guilty of “espionage” and “conspiracy to commit acts that destabilise national security and stability”.¹⁴⁷ Their cases sparked international outrage by human rights organisations¹⁴⁸ and global media outlets,¹⁴⁹ and UN experts have deemed their detention to be arbitrary.¹⁵⁰

Similarly, Omed Barushky, a journalist working with the Metro Center¹⁶³ who covered government corruption and violations by security forces, was arrested after participating in the August 2020 demonstrations.¹⁶⁴ Convicted on charges of defamation,¹⁶⁵ gathering with the intent to commit a crime,¹⁶⁶ espionage and sabotage,¹⁶⁷ he was sentenced to one year in prison in June 2021, sentenced to another year in September, and received 6 more months in October.¹⁶⁸ He was released from prison in February 2022.¹⁶⁹

KR-I authorities also arrested Syrian journalist Sleman Ahmed,¹⁷⁰ who works for the local news agency Roj News, while crossing from Syria to Duhok in October 2023. Forcibly disappeared for 6 months, CPJ and MENA Rights Group filed a submission to the UN Committee on Enforced Disappearances in April 2024.¹⁷¹ Following the filing, KRG officials informed CPJ that he has been charged with espionage and is detained in prison awaiting trial.¹⁷²

Kurdistan Regional authorities have increasingly used their legal and security apparatus to target media organisations, notably as reprisals for covering protests.¹⁷³ For instance, Kurdish security forces raided and suspended broadcast media outlet NRT's offices¹⁷⁴ and headquarters,¹⁷⁵ and NRT's chief executive officer was arrested.¹⁷⁶ In December 2020, the of Media Printing and Publishing threatened three other media outlets with legal proceedings if they broadcasted violent images of the demonstrations, warning them against inciting their audiences to commit violent acts.¹⁷⁷

In May 2023, the KRG Ministry of Culture and Youth released a directive outlining new media regulations in the K-RI.¹⁷⁸ The directive tightened licensing procedures for K-RI-based media outlets, increased license fees, asserted control over what individuals in the K-RI could say on social media, and authorised the ministry to monitor published content and restrict the material outlets could broadcast.¹⁷⁹

Recommendations:

- Guarantee and protect press freedom and journalists and media workers' right to freedom of expression, online and offline;
- Immediately and unconditionally release journalists and media professionals detained for the legitimate exercise of their fundamental freedoms or for their journalistic work;
- Ensure that journalists and media workers whose human rights have been violated are provided with access to effective remedies and reparations;
- Take credible steps to create a conducive environment where journalists and media professionals can carry out their work safely and freely;
- Cease targeting journalists and media workers through legal threats, criminal charges or detention;
- Cease using overly broad and vaguely worded criminal offenses with harsh penalties to target journalists and media workers;
- Conduct prompt, independent and effective investigations into the abuses committed against journalists, ensure that the perpetrators are prosecuted and that the victims or their families receive full redress, and take action to break the record of impunity against journalists.

justice.¹⁸⁰ Iraq also supported recommendations to protect freedom of expression online.¹⁸¹ However, in practice, Iraqi and Kurdish authorities have failed to effectively implement these recommendations.

3.3.1 Iraq

In Iraq, HRDs, activists and dissidents have increasingly been targeted, notably through enforced disappearance and judicial harassment. The situation of HRDs has deteriorated considerably since the last UPR, particularly in the context of the October 2019 demonstrations.

In October 2019, Ali Jaseb Hattab al-Heliji, a human rights lawyer representing demonstrators arrested in connection with the October 2019 anti-government protests, was abducted and forcibly disappeared while he was on his way to meet one of his clients.¹⁸² A few days before his disappearance, he had faced harassment and death threats in his home from armed members of the PMU, who pressured him to stop speaking out about the killing of protesters and accusing certain PMU factions of these killings.¹⁸³ In March 2021, al-Heliji's father, who actively advocated for his son's release and sought criminal sanctions against those responsible for his disappearance, was assassinated.¹⁸⁴

Women HRDs have been subjected to smear campaigns on social media due to their participation in protests and have been specifically targeted through abduction and killing, particularly in Basra.

In August 2020, unidentified gunmen opened fire on a car carrying Lodya Remon Albarti, a defender of women's and environmental rights, who had previously been subjected to a long smear campaign.¹⁸⁵ Two days later, Riham Yaqoub, a doctor and defender who also advocated for the rights of women to exercise in public and use sports facilities, was killed by two unidentified gunmen riding a scooter as she drove through the centre of Basra.¹⁸⁶

The same year, Hisham al-Hashemi, a well-known academic and expert on jihadist groups, was shot dead outside his Baghdad home in July 2020 by gunmen on motorcycles.¹⁸⁷ It was initially reported that the people allegedly responsible for his killing were linked to the Kataeb Hezbollah militia, which Hashemi had criticised in his writings and media commentary. Initially sentenced to death, the main suspect was acquitted and released in 2024.¹⁸⁸ forms of attacks on HRDs, Ali al-Bayati faced judicial harassment¹⁸⁹ as reprisal for his human rights work as a former commissioner of the Iraqi High Commission for Human Rights (IHCHR),¹⁹⁰ despite the immunity he was entitled to in his position.¹⁹¹ In February 2022, he was investigated for defamation over TV statements about the IHCHR's work documenting claims of torture and denials of access to detention centres. In March 2022, he received a letter from Iraqi authorities demanding he refute statements against the administration of the governorate of Kirkuk under the threat of facing judicial proceedings, accusing him of inciting "disobedience, violation of the law, and sabotaging the peaceful coexistence of the people." In April 2022, Iraqi security forces attempted to visit his home in Baghdad, but he was not present.¹⁹² UN experts urged the Iraqi authorities to protect him from reprisals due to his human rights work.¹⁹³ Fearing further acts of reprisal, al-Bayati fled Iraq.

Furthermore, online freedom of expression in Iraq has been severely restricted, and artists, activists and social media figures have increasingly been targeted through arrests, prosecutions, and sometimes killings. In January 2023, the Ministry of Interior initiated an "indecent content" campaign,¹⁹⁴ on the basis of Article 403 of the Penal Code which criminalises published material that "violates public integrity or decency".¹⁹⁵ The Ministry set up a committee to monitor "indecent" or "immoral" content on social media,¹⁹⁶ and launched a "Balgh" (report in Arabic) platform,¹⁹⁷ to report social media content that "violates public morals, contains negative and indecent messages, and undermines social stability".¹⁹⁸

Human rights organisations, including Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch, expressed concerns that the campaign could suppress legitimate and protected peaceful speech and lead to self-censorship.²⁰³ Among specific cases, in February 2023, TikTok user Ahmed Ali was arrested and detained for three days because one of his videos criticised the KRG’s internal security forces.²⁰⁴ TikTok user Aboud Skaiba was arrested for posting a video where he was singing with an English accent, and received a one-year suspended prison sentence in June 2023.²⁰⁵ The same month, TikTok influencer Assal Hossam was sentenced to two years in prison after posting videos of herself reportedly wearing form-fitting clothing.²⁰⁶

KRG authorities have increasingly weaponised vaguely worded laws²¹² to bring criminal charges against dissenting voices.²¹³ Between August 2020 and July 2021, an estimated 76 journalists, activists and teachers from the Badinan region were arrested by security forces and imprisoned in Erbil.²¹⁴

CPT closely documented the cases of 25 individuals, referred to as “Badinan prisoners”,²¹⁵ who were arrested between August 2020 and October 2021 and imprisoned as reprisals for expressing opinions deemed critical of the authorities in trials marred by serious violations of due process and fair trial standards.²¹⁶

Among them, five individuals arrested in December 2020 in Duhok were imprisoned for two years for having criticised the KRG of corruption and lack of transparency.²¹⁷ They were convicted for having committed “acts prejudicial to the security, stability and sovereignty of the Kurdistan region of Iraq”.²¹⁸ Four other Badinan prisoners, who were arrested in Duhok

MENA Rights Group is a Geneva-based legal advocacy NGO defending and promoting fundamental rights and freedoms in the Middle East and North Africa (MENA) region. Adopting a holistic approach, we work at both the individual and structural level. We represent victims of human rights violations before international law mechanisms. In order to ensure the non-repetition of these violations, we identify patterns and root causes of violations on the ground and bring key issues to the attention of relevant stakeholders to call for legal and policy reform.
